Repeated COVID Shots Driving Dangerous Variants, Turbo Cancers

According to vaccinologist Geert Vanden Bossche, DVM, Ph.D., continued mass COVID-19 vaccination is driving more infectious and potentially dangerous viral variants, increasing the risk of severe COVID-19, aggressive cancers and autoimmune diseases in vaccinated populations.

Pointed or pointless?

The public is understandably confused. On the one hand, major scientific journals, news outlets and authorities have used, and continue to use, superlatives to describe COVID-19 genetic vaccines.

The journal Science called the results of a Moderna trial "absolutely remarkable," The Washington Post referred to them as "an extraordinary success story," BuzzFeed claimed the vaccines "work way better than we had ever expected," while the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), the U.K. National Health Service and other authorities continue to cite the mantra used for all approved vaccines, referring them as "safe and effective" (here and here, respectively).

Conflicting information about an uncertain and unpredictable interaction

Yet, on the other hand, the scientific literature is increasingly awash with articles that suggest something quite different.

The CDC is still telling U.S. citizens to "stay up to date" with their shots, yet a preprint study released in June shows that Cleveland Clinic staff who weren't "up-to-date" with their COVID-19 shots fared better against COVID-19 than those who were.

As early as 2021, as indicated in an article in Nature Medicine, "viral variants began to stack up" only after the vaccines were rolled out.

An article published in Frontiers in Immunology in early 2022 details the multiple immune escape strategies used by the virus both following infection and vaccination.

Then there are people's individual experiences, with many who have been heavily vaccinated not experiencing good outcomes, either in relation to COVID-19 disease, a concern noted in the recently published Cleveland Clinic study — but also in relation to other diseases or conditions, cancer and autoimmune diseases included.

Emergency over — or not?

For most people, the COVID-19 crisis is over. That's largely a consequence of the World Health Organization's declaration in May this year that the "public health emergency" was no longer.

There are at least two reasons it is likely wrong to think that the COVID-19 drama is behind us.

The first is that the virus is still very much out there, circulating to its non-existent heart's content. While it remains at large, it is susceptible to natural selection of immune escape variants.

Secondly, it seems authorities have no inclination to sideline COVID-19 shots. By contrast, they want to keep using them, and no doubt will use any obvious waves of COVID-19 disease as we progress towards the northern winter to justify more vaccination.

There is no shortage of acclaimed "experts" who can confirm for you that SARS-CoV-2 hasn't transitioned to an endemic, seasonal pattern, as naturally occurring respiratory viruses typically do after the pandemic phase.

It's still very much around as you may have noticed in your own circles — it's just not being surveilled with the same intensity via COVID-19 testing stations dotted around each and almost every industrialized country.

Ditching the nationwide testing programs wasn't just seen as a waste of resources, it might also have been recognized that its continuation would dent people's faith in the genetic vaccines, a reputation the establishment seems very keen to protect.

An article just published in STAT included feedback from numerous acknowledged experts in the field, ones aligned with the mainstream scientific establishment, including Michael Osterholm, director of the University of Minnesota's Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy.

Most of the experts interviewed confirm that the virus has yet to achieve true endemicity and seasonal patterns.

This equates with the lack of understanding of how population-level immunity shapes the evolutionary dynamics of the virus, a phenomenon that is greatly complicated by the genetic vaccination program.

In fact, it is this poor insight that remains one of the most defining characteristics of a virus put under immune selection pressure after its release on human populations over three years ago, making a mockery of much of the predictive modeling that has been undertaken to date.

Conflicting information doesn't just create confusion. It creates cognitive dissonance. That's an uncomfortable and unsettling feeling — and it drives people to find, and latch onto, what feels to them like a coherent, trusted view.

This causes division. Some still have trust in the authorities and the scientific establishment that remain steadfastly on the "vaccines-are-our-best-fix" podium. Others of us cannot support this view, seeing it as incoherent, both scientifically and experientially.

Many of us have lost trust in the scientific establishment, full stop. See here and here for our reasons why.

Any trust that we might have had prior to the COVID-19 crisis has since evaporated, largely because of the way the crisis and information relating to it was handled. That includes the mass censorship of dissenting scientific views.

Given the social nature of human beings, and our desire to align with those we trust, if we are repelled by one group we distrust — such as the scientific establishment responsible for our "COVID-19 worldview" — we find ourselves being attracted to others with whom we see reason to trust.

Geert Vanden Bossche — dedicated to better understanding the uncertainty

It is in this vein that I get to the main purpose of the present piece. It is to introduce you to a new article by a person who has been something of an icon for many of us who have been attempting to grapple with the complexity of our immune systems' dance with the ever-changing SARS-CoV-2 virus.

Changes that have been undoubtedly amplified greatly by the global COVID-19 vaccine program.

The person to whom I refer is of course immunologist and vaccinologist, Geert Vanden Bossche, DVM, Ph.D., a person I admire greatly both for his scientific rigor and his resolve, but also for his bravery in the face of the monolith we might refer to as the scientific-medical-industrial complex. I am also humbled to regard Vanden Bossche as both an ally and a friend.

Before offering you a précis of Vanden Bossche's latest thoughts based on extensive evidence, all compiled in a brand new report, I also want to highlight that Vanden Bossche has dedicated this report, which we have designed into a standalone publication, to John Heathco, a computer engineer and self-confessed "health & wellness junkie," who died suddenly and tragically in June, along with his girlfriend.

Download Vanden Bossche's latest report, "Immunological correlates of vaccine breakthrough infections caused by SARS-CoV-2 variants in highly C-19 vaccinated populations."

On June 13, Heathco and his girlfriend, Abby Lutz, died tragically overnight while in a 5-star hotel, on holiday in Mexico, following "intoxication by an undetermined substance." It turns out the substance may have been carbon monoxide from a gas leak.

In Heathco, we lost a dear friend and ally in the freedom and truth movement, someone whose passion to understand the complexities of our interaction with this virus had drawn him to Vanden Bossche, and Vanden Bossche's work.

A very sad loss, the loss of someone who had increasingly become a key support pillar for Vanden Bossche. So when Vanden Bossche reached out to me after returning from California for a celebration of Heathco and Lutz's lives, asking if we might publish the article through the Alliance for Natural Health, we were only too happy to help.

So we, too, make this dedication to John and to Abby. Fly free, together, without limits.

In a nutshell

In his article, Vanden Bossche sends a stark warning to those contemplating more COVID-19 shots later this year, as we proceed towards the northern hemisphere winter.

He explains in great detail how and why highly COVID-19-vaccinated populations will:

- Serve to drive ever more infectious and potentially dangerous, immune escape, Omicron-derived variants.
- Be at greater risk of severe COVID-19 than less vaccinated or unvaccinated populations.
- How the risk of other conditions among highly vaccinated populations, including aggressive, early-onset, "turbo" cancers and autoimmune flare-ups, will likely increase significantly compared with those who choose to avoid further COVID-19 vaccination.

The evidence base pointing in this direction is becoming ever stronger (with many references being made to other literature in Vanden Bossche's report).

What is more a matter of debate is the mechanisms driving specific interactions, as opposed to the end result. The objective and deterministic world that has delivered so much technology seems incapable of accepting something unless a mechanism is given.

Observation, measurement, or experience on their own are not enough. We all crave knowing why and how something happens, and we'll so often deny its existence if we're not given an explanation for how it works.

Knowing what we already know, it is a travesty that such large swathes of the public still have confidence in COVID-19 vaccines, the vehemence of this position in the public's mind reflecting the power of the machine driving the agenda.

In the simplest terms I can muster, this is what Vanden Bossche is suggesting is going on, including the elements that are a well-known part of the immune cascade that occurs following infection or vaccination.

What Vanden Bossche argues is that if you keep vaccinating large cohorts of people while the mutation-prone virus continues to circulate (i.e. during a pandemic), the cascade of events moves in a different direction to that which occurs with natural infection from a virus that enters via the respiratory system.

COVID-19 vaccination induces a range of immune responses, the target as far as vaccine makers are concerned being the neutralizing antibodies made in the B cells of the adaptive immune system that take some weeks to mount an optimal response.

For vaccinees, this immune response is triggered by the slightly modified version of the virus' spike protein that is expressed in cells of the body, but of course, most also encounter the wild virus that infects the upper respiratory tract.

What has been revealed without any doubt over the last couple of years is that these all-important neutralizing antibodies don't work effectively within the context of an immune escape pandemic.

That's been especially the case since the Omicron variant evolved, itself being a response to the extreme immune selection pressure from mass vaccination.

The hope had been that when a vaccinated person becomes infected with the real virus, these neutralizing antibodies would bind primarily to the receptor-binding domain (RBD) displayed at the end of the coronavirus spikes around the surface of the virus.

These, in turn, block the ability of the virus to dock with ACE2 receptors even when the RBDs are in their primed, "open" position, and it is the ACE2 receptors on the epithelial cells of our bodies; these receptors provide the doorways that allow these viruses into our bodies, assuming they haven't been blocked by the neutralizing antibodies.

But, in the case of large parts of the population being vaccinated while being exposed to the virus, these neutralizing antibodies do the job imperfectly because their affinity and/or titers (or: concentration in the blood) are still too low when they encounter the virus.

This is because, after infection, it takes a few weeks for these antibodies to proliferate and mature in germinal centers and to (get them to) perform at their best.

There's also another kind of antibody produced by B cells, called non-neutralizing antibodies. These are typically elicited in the presence of vaccinal antibodies with strongly diminished neutralizing capacity; they are short-lived and do not mature into high-affinity antibodies.

As their production is thought to be triggered by a repetitive antigenic pattern displayed on multimeric viral assemblies (so-called viral aggregates) they are called "polyreactive" non-neutralizing antibodies (PNNAbs).

These antibodies bind to the virus but instead of neutralizing the virus, they enhance its entry into susceptible epithelial cells, thereby causing PNNAb-dependent enhancement of viral infectiousness.

One of the features of the early Omicron-derived immune escape variants was that they drove repeated re-stimulation of PNNAbs in vaccinees (due to the strongly diminished neutralizing capacity of vaccine-induced Abs) and history was made when Omicron became the first SARS-CoV-2 variant to cause PNNAb-dependent breakthrough infections in heavily vaccinated populations.

This contrasts with the immune escape variants that circulated prior to Omicron.

The resemblance of their spike protein to the one used in the vaccines was still good enough to drive "original antigenic sin," which we explained in an article we published on our website in November 2021 (see image from this article above) on which Vanden Bossche and I collaborated.

These variants, therefore, recalled previously vaccine-induced antibodies. However, as the latter became increasingly less effective in neutralizing newly emerging variants, the "antigenic sin" effect only contributed to furthering viral immune escape.

But, sadly, it doesn't end there. Complications arise because there are multiple classes of antibodies.

Many will have heard that the neutralizing antibodies belong to a group of proteins called immunoglobulins of which there are multiple classes or isotypes, notably A, D, E, G and M, giving the names IgA, IgD, IgE, IgG, IgM and so on.

These in turn have subclasses, and one that is central to Geert's concern is one of the SARS-CoV-2 spike-specific IgG subclasses called IgG4.

Making matters more complicated, the immune system, being as versatile as it is, also has the capacity to engage in immunoglobulin class switching, sometimes also known as isotype switching.

Your support helps fund this work, and CHD's related advocacy, education, and scientific research.

DONATE NOW

While there's been a lot of work showing IgG and IgA are elevated for a number of weeks post-infection or vaccination, there is now a clear sense that one sub-class of IgG that is normally present at the lowest levels, IgG4, is becoming more prevalent, especially as a result of delayed affinity maturation into a class switched IgG4 isotype in those who are heavily vaccinated without prior infection.

This therefore applies to the majority of vulnerable people in heavily vaccinated countries.

This is where things become really interesting — and even more concerning. Two clear mechanisms appear to operate in parallel.

Firstly, the PNNAb-driven breakthrough infections cause a phenomenon known as steric immune refocusing (SIR) which causes insufficiently neutralising anti-spike antibodies to bind weakly (or: with low affinity) to the "immune dominant" domains of the spike of SARS-CoV-2 (primarily situated within the RBD).

As their binding masks the "immunodominant" parts of the spike antigen, other spike-associated domains that are subdominant or immune recessive are no longer outcompeted for eliciting their own, broadly neutralizing antibodies.

However, as the latter is directed to weakly immunogenic domains (i.e., immune subdominant or immune recessive), titers of these antibodies are low and rapidly decrease, thereby fostering enhanced immune escape.

Secondly, there is the all-important elevation of IgG4 titers. The IgG4 class switch appears to be a last-ditch mechanism by the body to try to deal with the lack of effectiveness of both types of neutralizing antibodies, and innate immunity which should have delivered the first salvo of attack but failed to do so because Omicron and its descendants cause vaccine breakthrough infections which expedite production of viral progeny and therefore fail to trigger cell-based innate immune cells (e.g. Natural Killer cells).

Ongoing large-scale vaccine breakthrough infections due to more infectious Omicron descendants then place continuous immune selection pressure on circulating viruses that continue to try and work around the body's defenses.

The lack of sterilizing immunity coupled with the immune selection pressure towards newly emerging immune escape variants means that a cycle is set up in highly vaccinated populations that have no mechanism to dampen out circulating infection.

More and new breakthrough variants are created, and the cycle goes on and on, with no development of true herd immunity.

This loop is something that wouldn't have occurred if populations had not been massively vaccinated during this pandemic.

mRNA vaccines are only expediting immune escape as they promote immune refocusing (refer to Vanden Bossche's book, "The Inescapable Immune Escape Pandemic," published February 2023).

That's because the innate immune system would have been triggered, therefore trained and have come to the rescue, delivering natural killer cells and other biochemical and cellular weaponry that would have nailed infection much earlier, as it did in children (who have highly effective innate immune systems) during the early days, weeks and months of the pandemic, before the vaccines were introduced.

The process of SIR combined with delayed IgG class-switching to IgG4 that may in the short-term lessen symptomatic infection appears to also side-line the innate immune system.

Not only that, it severely compromises antigen presentation and thereby prevents sustained stimulation of PNNAbs, which likely protect vaccinees from severe disease.

While shifting protective adaptive immune responses from long-lived to short-lived, SIR and elevated IgG4 antibody titers are also driving large-scale immune escape which may ultimately turn new, more infectious, immune escape variants into lineages of the virus that are highly virulent in fully vaccinated individuals.

IgG4 has widely been regarded as benign or even beneficial in health and disease, the latter owing to its well-described and often helpful response when encountering allergens or parasites.

But there is a growing body of research showing that elevated IgG4 titers in the bloodstream, something that tends to be more common in chronic, long-term infections — and now with COVID-19 mass vaccination — may be detrimental and can be particularly problematic as it compromises antitumor responses and is associated with flare-up of autoimmune diseases.

Some of the latest perspectives on this Jekyll & Hyde nature of IgG4 are laid out in a recent review in Nature Reviews Immunology.

This is exactly the emerging picture we are dealing with; highly aggressive, "turbo" cancers and autoimmune flare-ups among the heavily vaccinated are being reported by exactly the same clutch of doctors and practitioners who first reported success with early treatments against COVID-19, including ivermectin.

That practitioner group was then silenced and marginalized. The truth, it seemed, was inconvenient.

Are we seeing a repeat of recent history? Are we inching ever closer to a time when authorities will be forcing the masses to line up once again for more shots as symptomatic COVID-19 disease rises (an uptick is already being noted in some official records), in the blind hope that a failed technology that's generated the problem might now resolve it?

When will we learn? Or, should we take better note of a quote that is often misattributed to Einstein, "Insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and expecting different results?"

No offense to the author, but all this biological scientific minutia misses the point. The best thing that doctors and scientists can do now is to emphatically advise everyone to BE BRAVE AND DO NOT SUCCUMB TO FEAR, DO NOT GET THE SHOTS, DO NOT WEAR FACE MASKS AND DO NOT TURN ON YOUR FELLOW HUMAN BEINGS THAT INTELLIGENTLY AND COURAGEOUSLY DO NOT SUBJECT THEMSELVES, THEIR LOVED ONES OR ANY OTHERS TO THESE INTENTIONALLY HARMFUL, IF NOT DEADLY, AND OPPRESSIVE ACTIONS RUTHLESSLY MANDATED BY THEIR GOVERNMENTS AND PUSHED BY THEIR USEFUL IDIOTS. This is a long ago thought out and planned sophisticated and repetitious program of psychological terrorizing with the intent to confuse, break down resistance and destroy most of humanity. Now, following the covid scamdemic of these past few years, we've thought, "Well, things have subsided, we got through this and now we can get back to our daily lives of school, work, community activities and family." Then the whole business starts up again with one thing, like a few infected here and there, then the face masks requirements at this place and that, just like what started it off before only now you know what's coming. Your apprehension and fear immediately arise, whereas the first time around you had no idea what to expect. It is a program of systematic terrorizing against Gary, here's a response in you article above from Dr. Jordan Peterson to Scream Queen Jamie Lee Curtis as she is referred to given her performances in horror movies.

Scream Queen Curtis: “COVID is on the rise. SO MANY friends now are really sick. BE MINDFUL. WEAR A MASK if required or even if you feel unwell and are out in public spaces,” Oscar winner Jamie Lee Curtis said in an Aug. 22 Instagram post showing an image of the actress with a mask.

Clinical psychologist Dr. Jordan B. Peterson responded to Curtis’ mask promotion by stating, “Enough medical fascism.” “Stay at home if you're scared. But leave the rest of us the hell alone,” he said in an Aug. 23 post on X.

Yes, quite naturally and understandably they would be hesitant to speak out against these or any other vaccines that would injure their patients. But what's the alternative? Contribute to the vast harm intentionally being inflicted on men women and children (especially children) worldwide by these injections and combined with so many other vaccines, many of which are also harmful? To keep their jobs and greatly profit from? There are countless testimonies following WWII by citizens, that for their own and their families' advantage, did nothing to save millions of Jewish, and others deemed unfit, men, women and children from being experimented on, worked to death and destroyed in centration camps. Or worse, those who collaborated with the Nazis that lived out their lives with relentless feelings of remorse for their hubris and moral vacuity. There were countless heroes too and some paid for their compassion and heroism. Not spiritually though. The article here is not helpful. It can be compared to criminal hostile forces, like the past and current Nazi eugenicists, attacking nations worldwide with nuclear weapons during which physicists write detailed and technical articles describing the physics of nuclear fission chain reactions.

I wonder how many people who were conned/coerced into taking the first shot hadn't been sick from anything, before starting on that path of death and destruction.
Perhaps after the 10th or 12th "booster" shot, they will realize that the injection is doing the opposite of what was promised. Nah...that would be too much to hope for.

A small glimmer of hope happened to me yesterday.

I relocated and have new neighbors. Upon taking a drive into the country together, the conversation of jabs came up. Even though they took 3!!! jabs, one of the women admitted she knows it's a lie. She began to tell me about her experience since the Pfizer jabs.

After 2 jabs, she tested positive and started noticing anything that bothered her "before" the jabs, magnified by the hundreds.

Then she got the booster.

Probably don't have to finish this story but will for the "newbies". After the booster a few weeks later, she got so sick she was in bed for weeks with pain in every part of her body, fever and became desperate for help. (nowhere to be found).

She now knows she was lied to. The fact that she now knows this was somewhat encouraging. Her husband on the other hand is convinced by the psychopaths that they were necessary. It's ok. One out of two is better then zero.

Yes, the first round of shots killed some of the population, but clearly not enough. I'm sure they know some people are 'ticking time-bombs' but for those that clearly defied the odds and still have experienced NO adverse side effects after multiple rounds, they are hoping that a few more jabs in these people should push even more over the edge. Sad to say, but oh so true..

They are not hoping. This is a military event and they know what is happening and expect what is happening. That's the part that people need to get their heads around. This is war world III and it's a war against most of us, by the few, who feel WE are using up THEIR resources, thus the push to eat bugs, while THEY will continue to eat meat, drive electric cards that are limited in where they can go, while Gates and company continue to use fossil fuels to fly around in their private jets. This has been a long term plan for generations. It's just that they finally have the technology they need to implement it, so they've planned it well: Spent the last 50 or so years dumbing down the public, ruining their health with so called food (I'm talking all ultra-processed foods), this means McDonalds, Wendy's etc., Seed oils, etc., and of course, the gene therapy that is destroying immune systems in those taking it, and of course, since it's a military operation, quality control goes out the windows. I mean, hey, what about Corminaty? The Approved version of pfizer's jab? Why is it not being used in the US? Because that would mean no liability protections. So I guess they are going to keep shielding the new jabs with liability protection, all the while, insisting people take it? WRONG!

I haven't had any covid shots much less other vaccinations, and that's the way it's going to stay. I am much healthier than people I know who got the shots and the boosters. They have developed covid, shingles, back pain requiring nerve blocks and Myasthenia gravis. Yet they keep going back for more shots and more of the toxic , addictive, disease-creating drugs their doctors give them for their drug induced illnesses. Secondly, it seems authorities have no inclination to sideline COVID-19 shots. By contrast, they want to keep using them, and no doubt will use any obvious waves of COVID-19 disease as we progress towards the northern winter to justify more vaccination.

Worldwide awareness of the shocking facts revealed by Dr. James Thorp and Dr. Naomi Wolf will force so-called "authorities" to admit more so-called "vaccinations" are 100% unjustified... People fortunate enough to hear/watch their powerful discussion will come away with zero "inclination" for receiving the deadly mRNA concoctions:

Yes Jerry, this is a very good article by Naomi Wolf. Here's 2 brief paragraphs leading to her interview with Dr. Thorp:

"In this interview, Dr Thorp describes how he was unceremoniously if not injuriously fired by his health system employer - though he was among the most published of his colleagues. He described the results of a FOIA launched by his wife, attorney Maggie Thorp, and himself, that revealed $13 billion in funding to “influencers” to promote the mRNA injections, including surfacing a contract with a for-profit OB/GYN NGO that oversees tens of thousands of obstetricians and gynecologists on two continents. The contract that the Thorps’ FOIA disclosed, provides for the return of the money if medical organizations do not adhere to the “safe and effective” for pregnant women and new moms script presented to them by HHS. Dt Thorp independently confirms the WarRoom/DailyClout’s findings now from three other independent sources: that placentas, fetuses and newborns are being damaged by the mRNA injection. All four sources confirm the same kinds of damage: fibrins, blood clots, “small for dates” restricted growth and weight of the placentas, and calcifications. Meaning that babies of vaccinated moms in utero may not be getting enough food, and they may lack the room to grow normally."

"Dr Thorp ends with the damning but unforgettable conclusion that every OB/GYN should have known in advance that this injection would cause massive damage to women and babies, because inflammation has been known to OB/GYNs for decades to be catastrophic to pregnancy."

I keep reading conflicting information. I really want to believe that viruses don't exist, but I don't know where to get really reliable information. Do you have links to sites?

Be sure to post this on all social media, I post to several. The only way to stop the madness is to make the public aware of the death jabs, bombard this everywhere possible so that people find out, when enough people refuse each and every clot shot, then it should end. I post all of Steve Kirsch, Dr. Makis, Dr. Malone, Dr. McCullough. Spread the word.

We can spread the word but unfortunately, at least in the northeast U.S., people refuse to listen, much less believe it. They still think government has our best interests at heart. I wish I knew how to get past that wall.

"Driving Dangerous Variants"...
What the load of baloney. If we observe any truly existing 'coronia' variant (mutant, subvariants, lineages...whatever), each of them is according even to fear mongering 'goovernmet' media, less dangerous ! !
Listen to Patric Henningsen podcast, get wider perspective and healthy dose of laughing 😂

...because if you continue to be preoccupied with this imaginary 'coronia'...you will get sick indeed.
'virus' is not bioweapon, injections ARE !

Another play on words:

Microsoft vs Microwave

Not too difficult to see what is going on here.

The one thing that was very, very, very obvious to me at least.

The amount of 5G antenna going up all over Manhattan was phenomenal. By the time we were able to go out to the liquor store (but not church); Walmart (but not private owed stores); online medical visits (but not able to go out the doctors we have used for years); impossible to get Ivermectin (but fentanly and heroin was all over the place). You get the jist.

The threat of grid attack is real. What would have happened if the internet had gone down during the "plandemic"?
